Q&A

- Q. So, you're bringing in a lot of revenue, but your Adjusted EBITDA and cash flow profiles aren't changing that much – why are you doing this?
- A. This transaction exemplifies Primus' forward strategy to invest meaningfully in the scale and capabilities of its core businesses and to divest non-core assets to unlock their value. Arbinet doubles Primus' scale in international wholesale and gives us greater product diversity, key strengths as the international carrier market becomes more competitive and as carriers look to outsource their wholesale needs to players of size. The benefits of the Arbinet combination are expected to:
- i. Enhance market position
 - ii. Improve Cost Structure
 - iii. Expand international reach
 - iv. Lower operational costs
 - v. Improve products and services
 - vi. Improve operational efficiencies
 - vii. Create corporate synergies
- Q. How long will integration take?
- A. We expect integration to be completed by year-end 2012 in two phases, the second phase, network integration, being the last to be completed
- Q. How much of Primus will Arbinet shareholders own?
- A. Based on the companies' current capitalization, Arbinet shareholders will be expected to own approximately 23% of the combined company, and Primus shareholders will be expected to own approximately 77% of the combined company upon the closing of the transaction.
- Q. What are the synergies expected to be derived from integration?
- A. Expect Adjusted EBITDA merger synergies of approximately $3 million and $7 million in 2011 and 2012, respectively
- Q. What is the EBITDA contribution by revenue mix?
- A. Arbinet derives revenue in two streams, wholesale Trading Revenues from the exchangeSM platform, which is completely offset by cost of services, and Fee Revenues, which delivers a 100% contribution margin.
- Q. Will you need to invest capex as part of the integration?
- A. At this time, we do not believe there will be an significant incremental capital expenditures arising from the merger or integration
- Q. How does Arbinet diversify Primus' product set?
